

Engage Your Brain!!

Think about the different situations and write a thoughtful response to each. Give specific examples and explanations when asked to do so. About a short paragraph per situation.

Not Feelin' It

Someone you don't particularly know or like is asking you to do something you don't really want to do. With a partner, discuss how to use irony or sarcasm to explain why you are turning down the request. Read the definitions for irony and sarcasm.

If someone i dont know or like asked me to do something I could use sarcasm to say no. Here is an example if she asked me to do her homework I could say doing someone's homework is how I want to spend my day. I think this is not being mean but still giving her a hint and funny.

Say What You Think

The expression "speak truth to power" means to tell difficult facts to people in positions of power or authority who might not want to hear them. For example, younger people are speaking out about the need for immediate action on climate change. With a partner or by yourself, think about when you have seen an example of someone speaking truth to power. Together write a description of the situation and what, if anything, resulted from the situation.

When a student tells the principal about bullying that is happening and something needs to happen they want the school better. This brings new rules and helps the students speak up is important.

What Is This About?

Here are three quotations from the letter you're about to read. Based on the quotations, what do you think it's about?

- "Sir: I got your letter and was glad to find that you had not forgotten Jourdon, and that you wanted me to come back and live with you again, promising to do better for me than anybody else can."
- "This will make us forget and forgive old scores, and rely on your justice and friendship in the future."
- "Surely there will be a day of reckoning for those who defraud the laborer of his hire."

A worker that used to work for someone and they are asking him to come back. He sounds nice and is talking about forgiving what happened but also about being treated fairly.
